Dr. Loria,

If you recall from your email below, you denied providing Erin the support she required.

At my direction, and with Erin's assistance, we conducted our own due diligence to confirm the requirements for 797 compliance. Erin, who has experience of her own, did extensive research and worked directly with a national expert to obtain the specific guidelines for her/our licensees' compliance.

Resultantly, from Erin's past work with Miguel, it appears there are additional requirements that are not included in your currently recommended protocol. These requirement are prerequisites for sterile compounding. This of course, is in addition to all of the daily requirements.

Erin has ordered the necessary equipment for maximum compliance so that our licensees can compound in the proper environment.

At this point, I will no longer need your assistance with 797 matters. Further, I would be happy to share our findings with you on one of our future calls.

If any of the licensees need product, they should contact me directly to make arrangements.

Dr. Loria,

Regardless if you invented the formula or not, the patent is an asset of Lorstan, and has no bearing on pharmacy compliance matters.

You refused to provide the pharmacist necessary information because I would not succumb to your demands to open additional Loria Medical offices. Of course, this fact is corroborated.

Under California pharmacy law, and as confirmed by our California pharmacy attorney who is personally known to the California Board of Pharmacy, I as a CEO, a CPA, or as an average citizen, can own and/or manage a pharmacy of any kind as long as I employ, as an employee or contractor, qualified individuals to fulfil state law requirements. It is their confirmation that dictates compliance, not mine or yours.

I have two licensed California pharmacists to handle such matters for me. Erin, who you trained to compound, and another California licensed pharmacist who is a nationally recognized 797 expert. This individual is also personally known to the California Board of Pharmacy and is recommended by them to help others with 797 compliance issues. He has provided us the 797 guidance you refused to help Erin with. You must have misunderstood my prior emails as there has been no changes to the compounding process.

It is my responsibility to make sure our licensees have a qualified lab for their compounding. As stated above, I am well within my rights to hire and manage qualified individuals to do so.

As long as you persist in your attempts to sabotage Lorstan, I will take on all necessary duties, under the law, to advance the company's business plan.

Dr. Loria

I hope the info that I sent you yesterday was helpful. It was intended to provide you the same information I have in making decisions that benefit Lorstan and its licensees.

You and I, regardless of our positions, are not the decision makers of whether the labs are in 797 compliance. That task is left to the licensed professionals and provides us assurances that all required rules are followed.

For our business model, our pharmacist does not compound for Lorstan (other than to hone skills and to test product samples). She compounds under the auspices of our licensee doctors' medical licenses and for CA pharmacy law purposes this does not constitute "practicing pharmacy".

As we discussed at the beginning of this lab project, and also under CA pharmacy law, any technician can compound for a doctor as long as that doctor approves of that individual's skills. Though not required, we chose to train a licensed pharmacist for our own benefit and the benefit of our licensees.

We now have licensees that would like to have product compounded and I would like us to move forward together to do so. If you want speak with Erin about this, I would only ask that you keep it respectful and professional with her. She is a great asset for us.

Also, as I said yesterday, you may have misunderstood an earlier email, as there has been no changes in our compounding process.

Please let me know if you want this phone call arranged.

Regardless of any past differences that we may have had, I look forward to resolving all of our issues.

John
